California Revisited.

Ir was in the summer of 1849 that we strolled make warehouse of G. B. Post & Co., located at e then terminus of California street, San Franisco, along the beach a distance of half a mile or nore, to Rincon Point, without meeting a building to obstruct our course, though a few rough cottages and tents were scattered over what was then and is still called Happy Valley. An original sketch of the town as it appeared at that time, is still preserved in our sanctum as a memento of the pioneer days of '49. ince then a most wonderful change has taken place every feature of the city. From a few scattering rancisco in '49, it has been transformed to a ensely settled city, stretching in every direction ver and beyond the amphitheater of hills which hen enclosed it; but which are now within it. appy Valley and Rincon Hill, which then were an roken thicket, of wild shrubbery, and only ted with white canvass tents, are now covered h stately mansions and blocks of stores and manupries. And even on the identical spot where spent two or three days taking a sketch of the ce nine years ago, now stands the United States lospital, a lofty building of extensive dimensions, and an ornament to the city. San Francisco of 1849, from a small town of four or five thousand, has expanded to a city of at least 60,000 inhabitants. To witness and realize this change, fills one with wonder at the almost omnipotent power of gold, for gold alone

ses, which constituted the chrysalis state of San

There is no question that California is destined to be a wealthy and powerful State, and San Francisco a commercial mart of no ordinary size and importance. This is apparent at o glance. It is the immense traffic created by her gold that has given her the impetus which she has received, and Reislie destined to impel her forward with still greater strides. But though her gold has created it, yet not that alone, but the vast agricultural resources which she possesses constitute the power which is destined to sustain that progress and make her truly great.

The present growth of the city is apparently as has been the agent which has wrought it.

great as at any former period, though the improve- lulu is a stone coral wall, laid in twenty feet water, number of stores erected is probably Treicess of the actual demands of the trade, and as a necessary consequence we find that the rate of rents in all parts of the city is rapidly decreasing. Good fire-proof stores for retail purposes, can now be had in favorable locations at from $100 to $150 per month; and for wholesale trade, from $150 to $300 per month, according to the size and storage room attached. All who are acquainted with the heavy rents paid there only three or four years ago, will notice a great change. But in the rents of dwellings the fall has been still more marked. Good hard-finished brick dwellings can now be obtained at from $50 to $75 per month, while well-finished frame houses in the suburbs can be had at from $20 to $30 per month.

But rapid as is the growth of the city, it would be still greater were the facilities for immigration increased. Much complaint is made, and very justly, too, against the monopoly of the steamer travel to and from New York, which unquestionably tends to check immigration, by the exorbitant prices now demanded. This monopoly, though detested and complained of by the public, is not an easy matter to get over. The opposition line, which of course looks out for its own interest, is now bought off, and their steamers will probably remain "laid up" in full view of the town as long as they continue to receive half a million per annum for so doing.

The cost of passage through to New York, including incidentals, is now $309. The steamer of April 20 took not far from 1400 passengers. They do not report so many, as the company is liable to fine for any excess of passengers over the legal rate. The last steamer from Panama is reported to have brought over 1500 passengers. A gentleman purchased an enal state-room in the May 5th steamer, for himof and family to New York, for $675, and was offered $1000 for the same four days after he purchased it. All the state-rooms in the steamer to sail that day were taken up ten days before her sailing-

at is the crowd of travel on this route. It pears very doubtful whether any permanent rival ne of steamers will be established before the expira-ion of the contract with the present mail, company, Ithough it is a matter of vital importance to the with of that State, as well as the other Pacific States that the price of passage to and from New York be president as low as to allow the working classes to come and bring with them their families. These are the classes that develope the wealth of the country, and whatever tends to somether out is opposed to its true interest.

But it is not simply in the appear the city that one discovers a marvelous change ye of cially noticeable in the markets. A visitor Washington Market will find the various stalls as fully supplied with every description of vegetables, meats, &c., as the best market in Boston or New York. If in anything the soil of California excels, it is in the production of vegetables and fruits, for these are the finest in the world, whether it regards flavor or size. The prices have been lowering every eason, till now most kinds of vegetables can be had of all kinds, however, yet command high prices, stock growing being still behind the demands of the country. The markets are supplied mostly by German gardeners, who bring in their products in wagons from the country around San Francisco, which is admirably adapted to growing vegetables. Many of the vegetables and fruits are, however, raised across the bay, and brought to the city by the ferries. A large supply of fruits will come from the valley of the Sacramento during the coming summer. The supplies of fresh butter are large, and it does one good to witness the piles of golden butter, equal if not superior to the best Orange county. The price present is from 35 to 40 cents per pound, but is said to vary much with the different seasons.

This great change from the scarcity and exorbitant prices which prevailed there a few years since, is in a measure owing to steam, which enables the gardeners, fruit-growers and farmers, at a trifling expense, to bring in their products with little or no ay and loss from their gardens scattered along the es of the large bay of San Francisco; and we d never expect to see any substantial progress in marketing or fruit-raising here at the Islands, To a anger, the streets of San Francisco present the appearance (particularly in the lower sections) of a city enging from a swamp. A few of the central streets well paved and resemble those of older cities, bu generally they are planked, or rather bridged, being wilt, in many cases, on piles over the water. These has are continually giving out, and in some of the water streets it is dangerous to walk or drive during the night, owing to the number of children, horses, houses, and even cargoes, falling through the wharves. These lower streets are. igh the wharver. These lower streets are, ever, being slowly filled in with dirt from
